

- 1) (iv) you wished to cut down as many ruffs as possible both in dummy and declarer's hand.
Clearly E/W are sacrificing and can't have enough high points for a 5 level contract.
They may get close by ruffs though, perhaps in dummy and declarer's hands.
The lead of the trump will rob them of at least one ruff. ( Your partner and you will continue to lead trumps when you get the lead to cut down even more ruffs later )
- 2) (i) you felt each of the other suits were too dangerous to lead from Something of a negative lead -you led the trump because you had holdings in the other suits you didn't want to lead from.
- 3)(iii) you wanted to play completely safe because the opponents had stretched Well you have pushed the opponents, perhaps too high so don't want to make a risky lead now. Leading a trump is safe and won't help them.
NB a lead of a club from Q76 or a diamond from J8 might help them where a trump won't.
- 4)(ii) you suspected that dummy would be ruffing
There is a double whammy reason for this lead -dummy has passed opener's second suit (which usually means they are short in the first suit and will want to ruff that suit) and we hold declarer's first suit which again makes us think dummy will need to ruff it.
ie we have KJ93 hearts, opener's first suit.
- 5) Partner is not the full shilling. They saw us start with hearts and because when we got in and switched to spades ( which partner won ) they didn't go back to our first suit.
It is very normal for an original leader to have to switch from their main suit and wait for that suit to be led by partner. Probably the leader had something like this in hearts KJ843 [ and they know declarer had AQ10 ]
- 6)Again we might wonder what partner is up to - "setting up my suit " they will answer and yes they have ....but how do they propose to get in to cash their two winners ?
This was just the sort of hand that they should have ducked your lead back in the hopes that you had another heart to lead to get them in later.
- 7) They did it again ! They should have realised that after your K diamonds lead that the defence had FOUR fairly easy tricks they could get ie Ace Hearts + K sp + Jsp + Q D.
When dummy led a small heart (at trick 2) partner should have jumped up with their Ace to make sure they made it, and then led a diamond back.
Instead they had a little snooze when the heart was led to declarer's singleton Q and so never made their Ace hearts ( it later got ruffed ) and didn't take four tricks and let the contract make.
